“ Jeff and Scotty,
I am so sorry to hear and read about the passing of your Dad. I knew him my entire life. To me in this photo he looks so much like a young Cotton. It's extremely hard when we lose our Daddy's. Prayers for you two and the entire family. God bless...

“ Growing up in Nashville, my city family visited our country cousins in the Allen family around Gainesboro often. After church and a big meal at my grandparent's house, we would begin the trek back to Nashville. I always loved it when we found there was enough time to squeeze a visit in to the Loftis house in Cookeville or to "Pat and Tommy's" house on the big hill. To a city boy whose yard was just too small...they were living large roaming the wide-open countryside around their home. I knew when we stopped that it would not be long before I would get into something I had never done before in the short time we were there. It was usually a little risky but it was ALWAYS worth the price. We would swing on wild grapevines and crawl under barn floors and chicken coops. Once we raced down the big rocky hill behind their house.

Pat and Tommy knew what they were doing. I DID NOT. They were very entertained when I was flying 20 feet with every step down that hill. I think they were a little more concerned when I repeatedly bounced about that high over the last half of the "race." They had puppies and shot pheasants and even had their own fishing pond. I was younger and sort of on the hefty side. Tommy was a little older, strong, very athletic, and kind of quiet. He whipped all my friends in backyard football when he came to Nashville to visit. I thought of him as a man's man. I reminded him of all of this when I saw him this summer at Aunt Joy's funeral. He just grinned, lowered his head a little, chuckled, and had that bashful nod as his way of agreeing without talking. He seemed as strong then as when we played together as children. I know we are all going to miss him for a while...but it won't be long. Tommy is a city boy now and I can't wait to remind him of it when I see him again.

“ Tommy really loved his family and grand-children. David Allen, Andy Loftis and I enjoyed our travels together with Tommy over the past few years to watch his granddaughter Kassidy play basketball for Jackson County Blue Devils. Tommy yelled not only for the team, but also at the refs. Good memories!
